The development of a technique for a permanent ventricular drainage of cerebrospinal fluid is probably one of the most important developments in neurosurgery. Representative of early techniques in this group of procedures is the Goldman-Fahrnikworth valve; however, this approach has numerous complications and complications can ultimately occlude the valve. A new approach was researched and developed to facilitate and increase the long-term success rates of the procedure. Demographics, surgical technique, and complications are reviewed. Between January of 1992 and December of 1994, a total of 31 children and 9 adults underwent a technique for the one-week permanent ventricular drainage of cerebrospinal fluid. 33 ventricular catheters were placed in the 29 children and 19 in the adults. A total of 253 ventricular catheters were placed, 27 (7.7 per cent) were placed with the new technique and were used as controls. 33/51 (64.7 per cent) of these catheters maintained its patency and valve function for at least five years. The median duration of patency was 21.56 months. A total of 24/33 (73 per cent) of the children and 10/19 (53 per cent) of the adults had no complications. No complications were seen in the 27 distal catheters placed with the neostripper technique. The rate of complications was lower than in previous series. There have been no instances of valve failure or stenosis and no catheters have been removed because of a valve malfunction. The new technique is simple and the data indicate a high success rate and durability of the valve.The taxman's ears have been burned Secretary of Defence Robert Gates has come under fire for attending the White House Correspondents Dinner.
