Lightroom is easy to use. Loaded with incredibly thorough features, it is a must for photographers who don't own Photoshop and want to master editing and organizing their images. Especially for photographers who use Instagram, most of its features are extremely useful. However, the user interface is very intuitive. The way you interact with images in the Browser is compatible with that of Computer, which in turn is compatible with that of mobile devices. Lightroom is ahead of programs like Elements, though it lacks features like Drawing mode and the ability to edit RAW photos. I have used Photoshop for many years and Lightroom started slowly to advance its design. Originally, the intention was to make it cross-platform and accessible for the customers but it seems that the initial vision was to obtain their customer for the Adobe company. It would be great to make it for all photography addicts. But it took longer than expected. I hope you'll like the transition of making Lightroom to be compatible with the MacBooks and iMacs. I feel that the interface is a bit more friendly and the user will get used to it faster. Lightroom has learned to adapt to this new platform including the very old touchpad technology. I simply love the way the category browser does not show the previews and I tend to believe that this is a business decision. Lightroom is good that it has changed. It's welcome that the interface is more conform to the Mac OS and iOS instead of the Windows one that everyone is accustomed to. A great thing is that it is fairly easy to switch and customize the different interfaces.
